Original Article Title: Beyond Platelet Concentration: Dose-Dependent Biogenesis in Aesthetic Medicine Using High-Dose, Mononuclear Cell-Rich Platelet-Rich Plasma

Author: Dr Jeannie Devereaux

Declaration: It has come to our attention that the correct formatting of mathematical equations were lost in two instances within this article.

(1) The first paragraph under sub-heading Platelet Dose as the Determinant of Biological Activity was incorrectly printed as "… 1 × 106 platelets/µL …".

This should instead read:

> "…platelet concentrations approaching 1 × 10^6 platelets/µL stimulate mesenchymal stem cell mitogenesis and cellular proliferation (8)."

(2) The first paragraph under sub-heading Cellular Composition and Immuno-Regenerative Effects was incorrectly printed as "… 1.42 × 106 platelets/µL …".

This should instead read:

> "Platelet concentrations, in this study, reached approximately 1.42 × 10^6 platelets/µL in 7 mL volume…"

Original Article Title: The Evolution of Cosmetic Nursing into a Much More Complex Role Over the Twenty First Century

Author: Dr Keturah Hoffman

Issue link: http://nla.gov.au/nla.obj-4224115167

Declaration: It has come to our attention that some of the intext references were not correctly bracketed throughout this article. For example, within the 3rd paragraph, the year 2015 has an extra digit on the end. The 3rd paragraph of this article should instead read:

> "By 2011 there were nurse practitioners specialising in cosmetic nursing and in 2013 Cosmetic Nursing was officially described as a specialty with the publication of a nursing model of practice by O'Keefe and Hoitink (3). O'Keefe went on to publish standards for cosmetic nursing in 2015 (2) following the first comprehensive "Professional Practice Standards and Scope of Practice for Aesthetic Nursing Practice" created by a working party of the Australasian College of Cosmetic Surgery (Now ACCSM) (1). The Nursing and Midwifery Board made its first position statement on cosmetic nursing in 2015, with an update in 2025."
